I started with audiobooks in the early 90s when I had a job that involved a lot of car travel. I abandoned them in late 90s in favor of paper books again. In between getting married and having children, I abandoned any fictional reading for lack of time. Three years ago I made a trip to my local library to pick up the first Wheel of Time book, but only the audio version was available. Around the same time, I picked up hand paper piecing a quilt for relaxation. I soon realized that I could listen to my book while using my hands to sew. My quilting and my audio books soon became inseparable. It took three years to finish my king-size quilt and the WoT series. They were finished 30 minutes apart. It was magical. I am now machine quilting alongside the Mistborn series. I've also taken to commanding Alexa to play my book while cooking. I don't think I could relax without my audiobooks now. Thank you so much for pleasing voices and hard work. Your interpretation of the characters and plot are unmatched.
